

Contents

Introduction	7
Part I. Bolshevism and Fascism: Two Faces of Totalitarianism	9
The Totalitarian Double Revolution in the Twentieth Century (1917/1933) and Its Ideological Roots—An Outline	11
Bolshevism, Fascism, and National Socialism— Related Opponents?	43
Part II. Late-Soviet and Post-Soviet Russia in Search of Identity	67
Farewell to Class Struggle	69
The Aggrieved Great Power: Russia after the Crimean War and after the Dissolution of the Soviet Union— A Comparative Outline	73
“Weimar Russia?”—Notes on Controversial Concept	81
A “Third Way”—Or Back to the Third Reich?	105
Part III. Poland and Its Neighbors	127
Polish Perceptions of Russia in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries	129
Aleksandr Wat about the Janus-Faced Russia	135

The German Question in Unofficial Polish Journalism Throughout the 1970s	149
Polish Antiauthoritarian Revolutions, the Euromaidan, and Putin's Neo-imperial Doctrine	161
Part IV. The Jewish Question	165
The Craving for "Organic National Unity" and the "Jewish Question" in the Writings of Fedor Dostoevsky and Heinrich von Treitschke	167
Cosmopolitanism as an Anti-Jewish Stereotype under Stalin	201
The Catholics in Postwar Poland and the Jews	221
Conclusive Remarks: Does Russia Belong to Europe?	233